Tel Aviv Files 6th Complaint

TEL AVIV, Aug. 27 (Reuters). —Israel again today officially accused Cairo, for the sixth time in 20 days, of violating the Middle East cease-fire.

Only hours after denying an Egyptian charge that Israel had violated the cease-fire, a military spokesman here said that Egypt was continuing to fortify its anti-aircraft missile network well within the Suez

He said that Israel had delivered an official complaint to the UN Truce Supervision Organization over what he called this "grave violation" volving construction and other preparatory work on missile sites up to and including yester-day within 19 miles of the our activities are within the terms of Paragraph C of the cease-fire agreement." This paragraph prohibits any change in the military status quo in the standstill area but permits the maintenance of existing installations at their pres-ent sites and positions.

Israeli sources dismissed the Egyptian charges as an attempt to set up a smoke screen to conceal Egypt's own violations.

They said that Israeli activity within the standstill zone had been limited to the main-tensmiss and sepant of positions and existing installations that were still occupied by Breeli troops when the cease-fire came into force.

components of school bus bodies. The board, an advisory arm of the Department of Transportation, published a special study by its Bureau of Transportation Safety that pimpointed such structural defects as a contributory factor in deaths and injuries in two school bus crashes. The circumstances of these and at least two other accidents indicate that "the prob-lems of inadequate assembly are not restricted to any one type of bus, but are fairly widespread," the board said. The bolts and rivets are used to join both exterior and interior panels and to secure them to the framework of school bus bodies. Failure of such fasteners to hold exterior panels together in crashes and to provide support for other structural parts has contributed to "disintegration" of school bus bodies and "is an implied threat to future school bus crashes," according to the study. The findings were based mainly on investigations of school bus crashes at Decatur, Ala., on April 23, 1968, and at Huntsville, Ala. on Nov. 19, 1968. Four pupils were killed and 42 other occupants injured in Decatur. At Huntsville, one pupil was killed and 25 occupants were injured. Both crashes involved brake failures.

The Draft: Reform and Abolition

There is a strong emotional and political appeal in the idea of eliminating the draft by raising military pay so as to attract more volunteers, especially in this pre-election season. The draft has become intensely unpopular. Its inequities, even in its modified form, are still shocking in a democratic land. Some experts raise serious question as to whether the existing Selective Service Act can be relied upon to supply the military manpower that the country must have for an adequate national defense. To many individuals in the younger generation who have been disillusioned by the war in Southeast Asia, the whole idea of drafting men to fight against their will is deeply offensive.

Despite all these currents of national sentiment running against the draft, however, the Senate voted 52 to 35 against the Hatfield-Goldwater amendment designed to end it. To its credit, the Senete refused to be carried away by the tides of popular opinion. Its vote does not appear to mean that a majority of its members are opposed to a volunteer system but rather that before the draft can be ended some workable syetem must be put in its place.

Sponsore of the amendment argued vehemently that the proposed higher pay would attract more recruits and that, as a result. Congress might not have to renew the Selective Service law next year. But in the eurrent temperament of the country it seems improbable, as Sen. Stennis said, that an additional $160 a month would bring in enough volunteers. Only about 800 men a month now volunteer for combat duty. It is estimated that more than twice that many will be needed to sustain even the minimum force of ground combat troops that will remain in Vietnam next spring under the withdrawal schedule. We hope that our military involvement in Southeast Asia will be wound up at the earliest possible moment, but national policy should not be dictated by a lack of military manpower to make official decisions effective.

One other powerful factor weighed upon the Senate. The Gates Commission, which proposed the policy of transition to a voluntary defense service, estimated military pay could be raised to a par with that in civilian life at a cost of 3.24 billion dollars. Current estimates are substantially higher. With the possibility of a 10-billion-dollar federal deficit already looming, both the administration and Congress are loath to add another 4 billion dollars plus in expenditures at a time when the costs of the war are still astronomical. In our view, equity demands higher pay for the men who hear the brunt of the fighting, but major adjustments of this sort cannot be brought about overnight.

We agree with the thoughtful analysis of Stewart Alsop in the current Newsweek which concludes that the present draft system must be changed because its inequitles have become intolerable. New incentives designed to bring riflemen as well as executives and technicians into the Army will have to be tested in practice. And if the country is to rely chiefly upon a professional defense system in peacetime, new means will have to be devised of luring men into the organized reserves. Some form of selective service may have to be maintained, at least on a standby basis, for the indefinite

Having rejected the experimental plunge advocated by Sens. Hatfield and Goldwater, Congress should now get on with the difficult business of carefully devising a new system and of finding the funds to support

The Liberated Woman

It is an unfortunate truth that a protest group such as the Women's Liberation movement can only make itself heard if it speaks at the top of its voice and resorts to publicity-seeking exhibitionism. The suifragettes of a half-century ago, whose great triumph-the Nineteenth Amendment-was commemorated Wednesday, were often noisy and obstreperous. Their successors of today go on strike, march down Fifth Avenue and "liberate" the Statue of Liberty. But the attention-getting artics do not detract from the substance of the demand for full equality put forward by modern women.

There has been a revolution in the status of women and it is still going on. The Women's Liberation movement is more its progeny than its progenitor. This revolution is, in large measure, a product of science and wealth. Because Western societies are increasingly rich, they can afford to educate more of their women and provide them with leisure. Because science has eliminated most of the drudgery, if not the tedium, of farm work and household work, millions of women are free to leave the fields and the kitchens and work beside men in offices and factories.

Once such a revolution in education and work took place-and it has been going forward with accelerating momentum in the United States and Western Europe for more than a century-it became logically impossible for men to sustain the pretension that masculine dominance was inherently natural or necessary. The spread of birth control devices has virtually completed this revolution by freeling women from the risk of unwanted pregnancies, the risk which heretofore has always hobbled women seeking the freedom men enjoy.

Now all that remains is for laws and popular attitudes to catch up with the new facts of equality. The three main planks in the platform of the Women's Liberation movement are unexceptionable. This newspaper has for many years advocated drastically liberalized abortion laws. Additional child care centers are clearly desirable to assist mothers who work. There is no good reason why universities and professional organizations continue to discourage qualified women from entering certain professions or block their advancement if they do. There could well be thousands of additional women in engineering, architecture, medicine and other traditionally masculine profes-

Sound as is the measure's goal, it is up to the Senate to explore the implications of the amendment's broad language and make certain that it does not inadvertently weaken the protection of working women or the property rights of wivee. This is a the matter for careful legislating, not for emotionalism or political gestures.

The vanguard women who write the books and lead the protests of the current movement are not necessarily going to be the models of the women of the future any more than most women of 50 years ago adopted the militancy of Susan B. Anthony or Carrie Chapman Catt, But old concepts like "illegitimacy" and the "double standard" will gradually disappear. Those women who have no taste for marriage or childbearing will feel less constrained by society to adopt roles which are uncongenial.

But many values will remain little altered. The family has proved to be a tough, durable human institution in many different social eettings. Many women will continue to find their most satisfying fulfillment in bearing and Texas, he is apt to scare off children and raising them. Like other revolutions in human history, the revolution in the status of women will change much and will leave much else unchanged.

Agnew to Southeast Asia

Mr. Agnew will doubtless have some difficulty in reaseuring the allies of his country in Southeast Asia, since such is apparently his mission. The Nixon doctrine is in fact universally interpreted ae aimed at U.S. disengagement. Mr. Agnew will point out that this interpretation is only partially exact, as proven by the recent interventions in Cambodia and Laos. and that the withdrawal of American forces is to be offset by increased U.S. aid. . .

But he will also have to admit that the Congress currently does not allow the President to conduct operations as he pleases...

The U.S. President, commander in chief of the armed forces, can theoretically send troops where he deems it useful. But he cannot spend a cent without the express anthorization of the Congress, even if that cent was to economize on American lives.

This is why the Thai etill have not sent troops to Cambodia. . Mr. Agnew will doubtless explain that the United States is in the midst of an election campaign. . .

But nothing indicates that the next U.S. Congress will be more docile, that is to say will finally accept a presidential policy which so far has not won brilliant successes.

PARIS.—The North Sea and Baltic Canal has not hitherto proved a commercial success. It appears that the dues are fixed so high as to prevent traffic from passing through the canal, as shipowners prefer losing a day or two rather than submit to onerous charges. Opinions in ell quarters are unanimous on this point. Unless, therefore, Germany intends that her canal should be solely traversed by warships, the present dues must be quickly and considerably diminished.

Agnew as 'Nixon's Nixon'

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON.-Gene Mc-Certhy's wisecrack about Spiro Agnew being "Nixon's Nixon" provides a useful corrective to the exaggerated bullabaloo over the Vice-President's role in the coming election, for despite all the Republicen ballyhoo and the Democratic groaning, Mr. Agnew is second

The top banana is Mr. Nixon himself. And matters have been arranged so that it will be possible for Mr. Nixon to be very active around election time, speaking on matters of vital national interest as a non-partisan President of ell the

To be sure, the Vice-President is not going to be mute and invisible. Once again he will make heard in the land the familiar cry that the it comes to standing up to the Commles. There will ring out anew the charge that they don't have guts to deal with racial violence and campus unrest. Similarly with the accusation that they are permissive about drugs, pornography, and long hair.

Fatcat Target

But most of this preaching will be adressed to the true believers. Mr. Agnew is the man for getting Republican fatcats to ante up the big ones at fund-raisers. His stuff the stuff the troops need to out and fight harder. And that could be important in the smaller states of the South and West where the Democrats are on the defensive and a mood of stupefied ennui about politics seems guaranteed to yield a low turn-out.

But Mr. Agnew is everywhere not the political equivalent of Aladdin's lamp. In New York, New Jersey. Connecticut, Pennsylvania the moderate voters Republican candidates need to go over the top. In Ohio he cannot undo the big issue, which is Republican corruption. In Illinois he cannot greatly harm the Senate bid of Adiai evenson, who has the insulation of Mayor Richard Daley of Chicago. Nor is there much he can do in California that Ronald Reagan can't do better.

The man who can make a dent these states is the President himself. He can do lt, as he did last year in the New Jersey and Virginia gubernatorial elections, by addressing himself to the nation on the grave issues of peace and war. And the key function for the Vice-President now, as it was when Mr. Nixon was Vice-President to General Eisenhower, is to underline by contrasting behavior the President's special status as statesman of high principle.

Over-Kill That explains the Agnew over-kill. It explains why one week Mr. Agnew kicks the stuffings out of Senators George McGovern and Mark Hatfield and their proposed deadline for troop withdrawal from Veitnam, while the next week the administration issues only the mildest comment on the same proposal as made by Senator Edmund Muskie. It explains why Mr. Agnew paints Democratic National Chairman Lawrence O'Brien in the blackest terms only days after President Nixon hails him as one of the architects of postal reform By no mere chance, moreover, there occur right around election time several occasions for Prealdential appeals to the nation. The strategic arms limitation talks with Russia resume in Helsinki on November 2-the day before elections. On November 5, the 90-day

And October 15 is terminal date for the latest installment on troop withdrawal from Vietnam, Depending on the turn of events, the President can use any of these occasions as a peg for going to the country, either as a man of peace or as the sturdy bulwark in a tough and dangerous world. Thus the Democrats don't only have Mr. Agnew to fight this fall. They have to arm themselves against the far more formidable figure of Pres-

Western observers here who fear that the Egyptians may be badly misjudging the depth of Israeli sentiment on the issue. And they fear that any future violations may well affect the peace talks now under way in New York

Israeli propeganda. The Egyptians point out that the Americans have not backed up Israeli charges, and they further assert that they have photographs to show Israeli bulldozers at work after the cease-fire building up the Bar-Lev Line fortifications along the canal'e east bank.

General View

Western observers here stress that they do not have access to the kind of intelligence presumably available to American and Israeli reconnaissance planes overflying the canal zone

But the most impartial observers here generally concede that there was some movement of missiles after the cease-fire on the night of August 7-8, Gamai Abdel Nasser made an 11th-hour attempt to beef up his missile defense east of the standstill line, which runs 50 kilometers on both sides of the canal. Informed observers believe that the Egyptians were not quick or efficient enough to get all the lowlevel SAM-3s into place before the deadline, and that the installation. therefore, continued a few days after the cease-fire. Egyptian sources bere indicate that many of the SAM batteries had alternate sites constructed previously about two kilometers from the main sites.

They say that the movement of missiles subsequently recorded by Israel may have been the transfer of the missiles themselves to the alternate sites while the primary bases were undergoing maintenance.

Thus these Egyptian sources say Nasser has not technically violated the agreement which provides: "Neither side will introduce or construct any new military instal- the Israelis that will foreclose any casse-fire in the Near East expires. lations in these zones. Changing Odds But American diplomats admit that "quiet diplomacy" is under way to dissuade Nasser and the Russians from standstill violations. Western diplomats here believe that the Russians, too, still favor a settlement but they may have According to this view, President gone along with Nasser in moving up missiles because the Soviets traditionally push an advantage as far as possible.

As for the additional mistrust engendered in Israel by the Egyptian maneuvering, one diplomat involved in the negotiations said: "There is a total lack of confidence on both sides to begin with. We don't hope for a rebirth of confidence but merely to work out arrangements that can be kept and supervised."

When President Nasser accepted the American peace proposals on July 23, he said he thought the chance of success was less than 1 percent. Recently, he told a visitor that the chances now were "a little less than one in four." By this standard, the odds were looking better.

But the fear among some Western diplomats here is that if Nasser plays fast and loose with the standstill agreement, he may provoke the kind of response from

Butterflies Time For Democrats

ST. JAMES, Mich.—This is "butterflies" time for the Democrats. A wave of nervousness is sweeping the ranks of their Senate candidates, making supposedly safe incumbents bite their nails and causing those with difficult races to redouble their pleas for

There is more than injured dignity underlying the Democrats' discontent, but that is part of it. Pastore, Symington and the 20 other Democratic incumbents seeking re-election this year last ran in 1964, when the Goldwater backlash made it possible for them simply to file their nominating papers and head for the Capitol. The campaign before that, for most of them, was in 1958, when the deepest of the Eisenhower recessions again made it easy going for

First Real Race

So, for many of these men, this is their first real race in years, and they are just beginning to realize how rough it may be.

Lest week's Life magazine "exposé" of Sen. Joseph. Tydings of Maryland did nothing to ease their anxieties. Tydings had been figured as a nearly safe bet for reelection this year until the conflict-of-interest charge was leveled. Now, some of the more suspicious souls in the Democratic cloakroom think they see a plot unfolding.

First there was Connecticut, they say. Attorney General John Mit-chell decided not to prosecute Democratic Sen. Thomas J. Dodd for income-tax charges arising from the misuse of campaign funds for which the Senate censured him. Now Dodd is back home, seeking vindication and re-election as an independent, and jeopardizing the chance of Democratic numinee Joe Duffey holding that seat for the Maryland, the Democrats say. What next? Indiana? Minnesota?

And Nixon

If there are nervous glances in the direction of the Justice Department, there are even more at the White House-East or West. It has suddenly dawned on a number of Democratz that the "non-political" President can arrange or contrive a number of happenings in the next two months that just might happen to have some powerful political Suppose that the prosper disgrace."

"That's pretty rough," said
Symington, shaking his head in disbelief. "I thought this fellow was by the President in a dramath televison announcement just before election day. How do the Democrats ask equal time for that!

Presidents have done just such things in the past—with varying results. John Kennedy's magnificent coolness in the Cuban missile crisis stopped the GOP canpaign of 1962 dead in its tracks But Lyndon Johnson's "pilgrimage peace" to Manila just before the 1966 election impressed no and - and the Republicans scored sweeping gains. This year, the situation seems ripe for a dramatic presidentia intervention. Interest in the campaign so far has been minimal, Polls in state after state show one-third more of the voters still undecided. Supposedly entrenched Democratic incumbents are drawing 50 percent of the vote or even less. Such polls are a warning of trouble. An incumbent who has failed to sway half the voters to his side by this time is obviously in danger of being upset. When voter sentiment has jelled as little as it has this year, any last-minute action by the President that wins strong approval could be dynamite.

Add to this the fact that many of the Democratic senatorial candidates are hard up for cash, and the reasons for their nervousness become very plain indeed. The lament is almost universal. Howard Metzenbaum in Ohio cao't raise money because everyone knows he is wealthy himself. Albert Gore in Tennessee can't raise money be-cause too many people think he is likely to lose. William Proxmire Wisconsin can't raise money because everyone believes he's certain to win: The reasons vary from state to state but the result is the same. Few Democrats are goin. have the money to match the television blitz their Republican opponents may mount in the final two weeks of the race. Richard Ottinger in New York will outspend everyone in his way, but he is the exception among the Democrats, not the rule. All these problems, and more, were laid before an emergency meeting of top labor politicians in Washington on Tuesday. And then the question was, "What should we do to rescue our Democratic friends?"

One staff member pondered a moment and said: "Let's just pass out flag decals at the supermarkets, and pray."

Pictorial Splendor

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

DARIS, Aug. 27.—"Anne of the Thousand Days" (at the France-Elysées in English) is a screen version of Maxwell Anderson's play about Henry VIII's secood marriage. Vast in scope, it embraces Henry's infatuation with Anne Boleyn, her stubborn resistance to his wooing-he has seduced and abandoned her older sister-until he promises to make her queen. It recounts Henry's divorce from Catherine of Aragon, resulting in England's breach with Rome and Anne's downfall when she fails to bear a son. A victim of court intrigue, she is tried for adultery and dispatched to the Tower

Anderson was an efficient, if Often over-ambitious playmaker and, under his pen, the story flows fluently. It serves the film with a cramatic retelling of historic incidents, though in the adaptation, some surgery has been performed on the original blank verse text. One does not regret the removal of certain Andersoo soliloquies, but a few by Shakespeare might have been substituted to advantage, After all, the Bard's Catherice of Aragon is a rewarding role and Wolsey's famous long farewell would have fitted perfectly, the crafty cardinal being extremely well acted by Anthony Quayle,

The production is one of hlaning pictorial splendor. The artistry of the color camera composition seems to transform the screen with its rich array

Geneviève Bujold's Anne is similarly divided. Though she sometimes appears to imagine that she is the Kate of "The Taming of the Shrew," she displays, as the willful, self-confident, echeming girl of the beginning, an all-conquering, adolescent charm and perversity in her calculating coquetry that very effectively illustrates the attraction she holds for the lustful monarch. Later, as the harassed queen, she is not always capable of rising to the dramatic challenge and is far less convincing. Hers is an attention-riveting performance, but it is promising rather than fully accomplished hrol, the New Wave cinéaste, at his best and at his most Chabrolesque.

He has taken a weird horror novel and extracted from its delirlous contents a brilliant film. A knowledgeable artist. he operates on two levels in his narration, moving from reality to unreality with an amazing dexterity that carries his audience with bion on these dangerous expeditions.

The scenario concerns the separation of a young married counte, caused by the husband's homocidal maniac-depression. His wealthy parents, anxious for his divorce and for the eustody of their little grandson, engage a wily loafer to spy on their daughter-in-law in hopes of obtaining detrimental evidence about her moral character. She has taken quarters in a sinister boardinghouse, the proprietress of which has an idiot child. Among the paying guests are a trio of mainly old spinsters, a ne'er-do-well actor and the hired spy.

The film, half grimly naturalistic and helf nightmare fantasy, is a mystery story and relles on suspense and surprises for countless episodes. Chabrol piles horror on horror, but

The acting offers a medley of styles, eleverly orchestrated by Chabrol's direction. Stephane Audran, suffering more torments than ever beset a saw-mill melodrama heroine, wins one's sympathy ot once and retains It with a fresh and appealing interpretation, Jean-Pierre Cassel is wholly persuasive as the sleazy blackmatter, Michel Bonquet is the heavy father to perfection and Jean-Claude Drouot as the demented husband boldly introduces an all-out performance in the avant-garde theater manner and, with histrionic daring, accomplishes his mission in a most difficult assignment.

The Virgin and the Gypsy' (at the Arlequin and the Paramount-Elysées: is an adroit cellulold transcription of D.H. Lawrence's novelette. In atmosphere, in mood, in performance, in period sense and in dramatic development, it strikingly captures the baunting quality of its celebrated source.

It has, true enough, tackled a less imposing task than did the film version of Lawrence's "Wo-men in Love," but it has, it seems to me, been more successful in its purpose. The castingsave for Franco Nero's hackneved gypsy-discloses remarkable discernment and, with Joanna Skimkus as the pining maiden and with Fay Compton, Manrice Denman, Honor Blackman end Mark Eurns in principal roles, it is superbly acted. It is the first film by director Christopher Miles, who was schooled at the Parisian cinema institute, IDEC. With it he makes an arresting debut.

The Neglected Memory of Charlie Parker

By Hollie I. West WASHINGTON, Aug. 27 (WP). -People don't speak of Charlia Parker much now. His name is rarely seen in print. It is almost an event of great magnitude when his music is heard on the radio and it is an unusual privilege to find his work in record shops.

Many young people never have heard of Parker and many of his contemporaries have forgotten him. It is astonishing how quickly the memory of a great artist can be naglected in the fury of com-

Parker, whose music was the model for a generation of jazzmen and whose personal babits were copied by a legion of hipsters, has been slighted by business interests that have focused entirely on the currently popular.

If Parker had lived, he would have been 50 on There are no formai commemorations planned, although memorial concerts are held in New York and Chicago each year around the anniversary of his death.

Bird Lives'

When Parker died in 1955, many of his followers scribbled the cpigram "Bird lives" on walls all over New York (Parker's niekname "Yardbird" was often shortened to Bird.) This same aphurism can be seen occasionally in odd places and it is not wishful thinking in one sense. Indeed, Bird fives on in the work of every modern jamman and many other jazzmen from previous

He was the dominant figure in jazz from 1945 to his death, and even afterward the strength of his influence was not lessened until the advent of Omette Coleman in 1960. Parker was a founder of the modern jazz movement, sometimes called bebop in its early

Although he was an alto saxophonist, the impact of his music touched all instrumentalists. Louis Armstrong is the only other jazz soloist who can he mentioned in the same category as Parker.

Pianist Lennie Tristano once said: " If Charlie Parker wanted to invoke plagiarism laws. he could sue almost everybody who's made a record in the last ten years."

Tradition

In the beginning, Parker drew oo the rich musical tradition of Kansas City, Missouri, where he grew up. He began his study of music in the city's schools and began playing professionally at age 15.

Parker played in several Kansas City-based bands, and also traveled around the country. In 1960, he joined the Jay McShann orchestra and made his first recordings. In the early 1940s, he took part in jam sessions at Minton's Playhouse in Harlem with Dizzy Gillespie, Thelonious Monk, Kenny Clarke and Charlie Christian. These sessions were a seminal source for the development of modern

In 1943, he joined the Earl

Hines orchestra of which trumpoter Cillospic was a member. The two, largely associated with the creation of modern jazz in the public eye, were thus able to assimilate each other's ideas. By 1945, Parker and Oillesple had their own group and the radical changes they advocated were having widespread effect. Many older musicians resisted. Billy Eckstine tells the story of how the great tenor sarophonist, Ben Webster, snatched a tenor out of Parker's hands one night oo a bandstand and exclaimed: "That horn ain't s'posed to sound that fast."

Not only did Parker continue to play fast, but he went on to turn jazz around rhythmical-ly, harmonically and melodically. He made the music more complex and at the same time he made it more emotionally direct than it had been in the

Engless Invention

Parker was a virtuoso who used his technique expediently and not to dazzle. He seemingly had endless invention. It startling to see bow rastly different were his improvisations within minutes on the same composition.

year-old daughter died from pneumonia, was considered a supreme con artist, constantly appeared late or not at all for engagements and reportedly treated most people, including his fellow musicians, worse than ... gnimals. Conversely, there are many stories about his generosity and graciouspess that some remember him carrying to absurdity. He was a family man to others Some musicians recall his fatherly attitude and desire to help them. This contradictory figure was emulated by the young who wanted to do the hippest things If Bird shot horse (heroia), then it was all right. Parker was a culture hero who personified the apolitical posture and torreptial pleasure seeking of the postwar beat generation.

Drummer Art Blakey once said Parker was not a sym of for Negroes and that they did not know him. This was generally true except for musicians and those who were artistically aware. But Parker reached the Negro masses indirectly through the hundreds of musicians who copied him.

Parker's masochistic response to racial discrimination and the eruelties of American commercialism typlfied the attitude of black musicians in the 1940s. Many of his generation—Bud Powell, Fats Navarro, Warden Gray-fell victim to the same excesses and mental argush that destroyed him,

They wanted to be more than mere entertainers and when their hopes were dashed they brutalized themselves. Perhaps this is why many contemporary black musicians, aware of what happened to their predecessors expect no quarter from while America and have immersed themselves in blackness.

A page, with a sketch for the "Madonna in the Round" painting for the Duc d'Alba, has other com-positional ideas jotted onto it as well and is done both in red Conte crayon and with pen and ink. In a silverpoint on whitepainted paper, of a crossbow shooter, the young man's figure is small and drawn roughly, while his hand is large and detailed—which makes for an unintentional collage effect. You can practically hear the master mutter to himself: "This figure—so..." quickly he jots down the young man. ASC Aims

Mr. Dove declines to answer questions about TI's computer plans, including whether the company will seek customers for the ASC or other TI com-puters, the pricing of the ASC and whether still other types of computers are planned.

TI president, Mark Shepberd did say recently that: There are many scientific problems, such as ballistic missile defense, weather forecasting, air traffic control and seismic data processing that require the high-speed processing of large masses of data," and that TTs ASC "is designed to solve these types of problems."

TI is already marketing a line of computers, taged the Model 960 and Model 980. designed to automate manufacturing operations.

the first of a tine of new machines that will solve most industrial needs for mini-com-

One reason for TI's reluc-tance to be explicit on its computer plans is that the company is a big supplier of elec-tronic components to present computer makers and remains unsure how its customers might view it as a competitor, sources

The computer field is just one of many that the company is entering with an eye to reaching its announced goal of $3 billion in sales by the close of this decade.

Mr. Dove said management expects profits to be "commensurate" with that sales level. The sales goal means TI must more than triple its current size. During 1870's first half, the Dallas company earned $7.3 million on sales of $443 million.

But TI has a 25-year record of sustained growth-a 28 percent compound average rise in sales in 1946-1969 and 27 percent in earnings that made it one of the glamour stocks of the bull market of the 1960s. Prodoct Mix

Mr. Dove says the sale of non-electronics products and services now accounts for a hig and growing share of total sales. The breakdown now is electronics 65 percent, "other" 35 percent.

In contrast to most U.S. companies with rapid growth rates during recent years, all of TI's growth in the last decado has been internal, with no acquisitions of any size at all. Asked if management has ruled out acquisitions in the future, Mr. Dove said 'no," but be added that most expected growth would remain internal. The company is in what can only be described as an enviable financial position—It has no short-term borrowings and its long-term debt is less than

The company is already engaged in the mushrooming semiconductor market, which has grown from $1.8 billion in in 1970 and a projected $4 hil-lion by the late 1970s. Mr. Dove says 'we are the largest semiconductor manufacturer in the world."

As an example of the company's ability to create and exploit new markets, he cites tho development this year of copper-clad aluminum electrical wire and cable as a substitute for products made entirely of copper, which has sustained a meteoric increase in price recently. Mr. Dove claims TT's copper-clad wire will save customers 50 percent in the United Kingdom and 30 percent in the United States. It is already selling the product to British Insulated Callender's Cable, and to General Cable Corp.

A Year Ago-One Man With an Idea

TODAY— MORE THAN $100 MILLION IN ASSETS

The man—Jerome D. Hoffman, founder of IIG. The idea—REFA, the Real Estate Fund of America, a no-load fund on capital account investments. An international real estate fund investing in construction and prime real estate in the U.S. and world-wide. Today REFA has more than $100 million in managed assets. The greatest first year in the history of the investment industry. And the year's not over yet.

This phenomenal growth is part of the dramatic rise of IIG. From a revolutionary concept in the mind of Jerome D. Hoffman, IIG has become one of the fastest growing financial companies in the world today. Offering two international funds, REFA and FOSS, Fund of the Seven Seas. Offering the first in a series of dynamic national investment companies in IIG Italy S.p.A. More than $100 million in managed assets. Over 3,000 IIG Associates in 35 offices throughout the world. Six international training academies designed to graduate 5,000 skilled financial counsellors every year.

These are the ideas that have made financial history in IIG's first year. No-load funds. Real estate and shipping. Construction and purchase. These are the ideas that have become a reality for IIG's satisfied clients and Associates around the world in this astounding period of growth.

And next year? A network of IIG hotels planned around the world. From Hong Kong to Rio de Janeiro. From Paris to Kuwait. Twelve new international training academies. A series of national investment companies worldwide. An unprecedented growth in managed assets. Thousands of new clients and Associates. A year that will far surpass IIG's spectacular first year.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

Two famous New York experts. Alvin Roth and Tobias Stone, won a convincing victory in an important pair tournsment played last month in Desuville, France. In a field of eight pairs, which included five former world champions, they scored 78 percent. The highest score achieved by any previous winners of this prestigious annual invifation event was 60 per-cent. A key deal from this match is shown in the diagram. Roth, sitting South, opened with one club after three passes. Stone's double of the one-diamond overcall was negative, suggesting moderate strength combined with some length in the unbid suits. This bidding device invented by Roth and Stone in 1957 is now widely used in tournament play.

Further dismond bidding from East-West did not prevent the discovery of the heart fit, and the excellent heart game was duly reached. C.S. Shen, as West, ventured a double on the strength of his two sure trump tricks, As often happens when a player doubles a voluntarily hid game, the double helped the declarer make his contract.

The opening lead of the heart queen was taken in the closed hand with the king. South was willing to lose two trump tricks and the spade ace, but he had to be careful not to lose control. At the second trick he made the key play of the club king, knowing that if this were ruffed he would still be in command of the situation.

West did ruff with the heart eight, and played the diamond king. The ace won, and South led a trump to the ace, leaving West with one winning trump.

IT was Randall Jarrell, I believe, who remarked that he could never quite get over the ease and nonchalance with which his students came to a reading of Eliot's "The Waste Land," a poem that in spite of its familiarity still made him wary. That these students had stood on the shoulders of glants, including his, was a fact he must have been aware of. Nevertheless, what had remained a battle for him had become a victory for them.

I was reminded of his comment on reading through these first books of poetry among others that had come across my desk recently. What is most evident is the way the lessons of modernism (for lack of a better word) have been absorbed. As everyone who deals with the general public knows, modern poetry presents formidable obstacles to the reader. Guidelines have been obliterated, the past destroyed, and poetry is poetry no longer. It is not beantiful, pretty or lofty. Forms are so open that much of it appears formless. To the unaccustomed reader there are no helpful signs like beginning capitals or rhymes or equally structured stanzas.

The language is flat and colloquial; the subjects unpoetic, the imagery violent or unpalatable. There is no rhythmic regularity; transitions are few, the thought is difficult. That the poetry of the past is also difficult carries little weight with those to whom a hardbreathing romanticism is synonymous with beautiful verse. They look on poetry as a form rather than as a texture or quality. When the shape changes, they lose the substance

But to the young poets today, the precepts of modernism are self-evident. They do not really think about them; they simply use them: And they are surprisingly able. In fact, what these three books have in common is competence, sureness of touch, absence of effort or strain. The poems are not equally successful, not always successful even within their own covers but to repeat a phrase used earlier, the battle is over. victory secured. ..

This gap between practitioner and public may seem surprising in the light of what appears to be the instant appreciation of the new, indeed a hysterical surge to greet it. But it can be noticed too in concert-going. where the young people simply won't attend another Philharmonic concert of the Brahms B-Flat, a work they have heard four times in the last month and one they can play at home any time they wish.

Of the three books, Mr. Root's leans more heavily on the natural world, with man in the center, enduring, contending, harmonizing with nature. is carefully observant. Billie Jean: Exponent of Lib, Let Lib

'Ask Why Laver's Not at Home

By Robert Lipsyte

NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (NYT). Billie Jean King, the most successful U.S. woman athletic star, says she is never offended by people who tell her she plays tennis just like a man. But she has become increasingly britisted by people who ask her when she's going to settle down and attend to a homeand family.

"Almost every day for the last four years," said Billie Jean yesterday, "someons comes up to me and says, 'Hey, when are you soing to have children?" They say: Why sren't you

"I say: Why don't you go-ask Rod Lever why he isn't at

"They say: 'Oh, but Rod The blue eyes flash behind The blue eyes flash behind round, gold-framed spectacles, "Well, that's not the point at all, I love to play tennis. My husband understands this. But people don't. If I were a ballet dancer or an actress, people wouldn't pester me to retire right away to have ride. The 25 right away to have kids. I'm 25, I've got time, but they don't seem to understand how I could find such great satisfaction in improving, in putting it together for a good match, in winning. When you've made the right moves for the right shot at the right time, it's a very esthetic

Billie Jean, recuperating from a complex knee operation, will not be making many right moves for some months, but the pace of her life-she is in New York these days to promote her new book, "Tennis to Win," published by Harper & Row, and to attend to such business enterprises as a sportswear line for Head and clinics for Pepsi-Cols still keeps her far away from her husband for long periods. She denies persistent rumors that they are separating, and admits that special kinds of "understanding" are necessary in a marriage in which the husband is only beginning to find his professional way. When we got married in 1965 we had no money and he didn't know I'd make this kind of money," she said. "He worked in a fectory at night and went to school in the day, he was a senior in college. He always worked hard, he'e ambitious, and when the money came he never took it for granted. Some-times I might feel funny away so much hardly ever together. and I'd say, I hope you don't feel I'm selfish.' I was really afraid he'd feel slighted. But he would say that he knew how important it was for me to go as far as I could. He knew if I didn't I'd be a vegetable, no good to anybody.

Larry King finished law school while Billie Jean supported them; with amateur money and later with professional meney, and he now is associated with Dennis Van der Meer in Tennis America a company that hopes to make it with tennis camps and mer-chandise schemes. A slender, attractive blond man of 25, Larry was a helpful teacher and analyst of Billie Jean's early game, but rarely played with her. He was at their home in Honolulu preparing for the Hawaii bar exams while Billie Jean was in New York with "My husband's the one who thinks women's lib is really great," said Billie Jean. "He feels that everybody should be equal. He's losse and limber. I think he knows in his heart and mind that he'll be a real big daddy some day. I still think you can be feminine and do your own thing. I agree with most of the women's lib things, but some of it seems far out. But that might be just for attention. Lord knows, you really have to exaggerate things these days to get attention."

Billie Jean has gotten her share through exciting play and a frankness—especially about amateur hypocrisy, snobbish traditionalism and failure to go to the people—that has caused her to be labeled "controversial." But her style and appearance has always tended toward last year's convention. Her harlequin glasses were only recently replaced, and then only because the mod ones enabled her to see better, she says. Her new, becoming slimness is because ahe is trying to keep weight off the knee, and she is dressing slightly better, she says, only because she feels some responsibility to the companies she now

Paint Me No Flattery

By Russell Baker

LONDON,-Down to the National Portrait Gallery to see the new painting of Princess Margaret which is causing the great controversy. Well the press says there is a great controversy, but the British public is not stampeding the gallery this morning with portrait-slashing devices. There are exactly eight of us in the presence of the contro versial canvas, and all are breathing normally. Why are oil portraits of state celebrities invariably "controversial"? 'The Peter Hurd portrait of Lyndon Johnsoo bestriding narrow Washington like a colossus was, in the President's eyes, the ugliest thing he had ever seen in his life. A recent portrait of Queen Elizabeth II, making her look twice as regal as any post-restoration queen would have dared to be. has been criticized as insulting.

Thus ever the lot of the portrait painter. It must be a frustrating art form-the painter struggling to put life on canyas, the customer reluctant to pay for anything but flattery. Now that we are all liberated, of course, the portraitist is free to make a mess of the face of the hand that feeds him, and his patron is expected to take it in good grace.

Brian Organ, the princess's

painter, has not made a mess of her face, but he lias left half of it blurred in a curious fog. The representation, however, is unmistakable. Color is sparse, the background stark and the head small in relation to the vast acreage of the canvas. Still, only the most captious royalist could take fright.

The traditional plight of the portrait painter is better illustrated on the gallery's top floor, where the Tudors, their ministers and ladies march off down the corridors under the hooded glare of Holbein's magnificent Henry VIII.

Of all this parade, only Henry is thoroughly credible. All majesty and ruthlessness and, yes, intelligence. And what a readiness to use power. You would not want to be invited over to play poker with this man, for he could beat you six ways, including—but only if he had to-a royal decree that your hand was worthless, and chesting.

He had a noble temperament that understood the gravity of art, a rare trait in a politician. How do we know? If he had not, Holbein's portrait would not be around today. It says something less for his remarkable daughter, Elizabeth, that there is no comparable picture of her in this gallery. Such portraits as exist bear so little resemblance to one another that they might be of different women, and none exudes the least breath of life.

Was it painter or statesman who decreed that posterity should not see the Tudors as they were in life? Here are oozens of pictures of these 15th and early 16th-century celebrities, names as well known as Johnny Carson's, famous for writing, fighting, conniving, exploring, and each one looks like the one before.

Wolsey, Cranmer, Thomas Cromwell, Raleigh, Essex, Leicester. Costumes change to suit the office, hairlines vary from man to man, here and there a beard breaks the moootony, but the faces have no identity.

Someone obviously was being careful not to assert himself. In Henry's time it may have been the subjects, whose faces oo canvas all have that careful look of guarded noncommitment affected by Mafiosi at the police station

· Considering Henry's tendency to put advisers aside unpleasantly when their usefulness declined, it is conceivable that his men preferred not to call attention to themselves. Hence these discreet representations in which all appear in the same

The Elizabethan peacocks must have been a different case. It was a time when men liked calling attention to themselves. Perhaps they did not want painters doing the calling for them, and so settled for a lifeless flattery which makes them all, seen through such a depth of time, look as alike aspeacocks.

Persons ordering their portraits probably believe, in most cases, that they are ordering the monuments through which posterity will see them. The lesson of the National Portrait Gallery is not very original. The one person there who seems physically present, Henry VIII. is the one who submitted to the sovereignty of a great artist.

"French and Italian directors are not very lucky here ... They think they know the country but they don't. They think it's a huge zoo."

Vadim Makes His First Film in America

By Kevin Thomas HOLLYWOOD.—For the past five years Roger Vadim has been referred to here more often as Jane Fonda's husband than as the enjant terrible of Prance's New Wave.

But now as Vadim ends two years of voluntary inactivity by making his first film in America, "Pretty Maids All in a Row," he may very well be once again the figure of controversy he has been throughout his career.

That is because "Pretty Maids All In a Row," adapted for the screen by Gene Roddenberry and William Hanley from the Francis Pollini novel, is a comedy so pitch-black that publicity agents beg you not to give away the plot. Regardless of whether Vadim is successful at pulling it off, it seems safe to predict that it will not be met by indifference.

Onetime Actor

Ever since Vadim, a onetime actor, journalist and screenwriter, made his directorial debut in 1956 with "... And God Created Woman," which made his tben-wife Brigitte Bardot an international sex symbol, both his career and private life have been the subject of sensational publicity.

His pictures became renowned for their eroticism, and Miss Bardot was succeeded by Danish starlet Annette Stroyberg and then by Catherine Deneuve (whom he did not marry but who bore him a son) and, finally, by Miss Fonda, from whom he is somewhat estranged.

The notoriety that has swirled about Vadim has texded to obscure a very real if erratic talent. Most film historians cite Chabrol's "Le Beau Serge" (1957) as the first true New Wave film, but there is no question that"... And God Created Woman," with its combination of commercial success and defiance of conventional morality, helped immeasurably to launch a whole new generation of young French directors who have been a major influence on filmmakers everywhere ever

Fourteen years and ten features later, Vadim is now living in a rambling, ramshackie old house at Malibu Calif. At 42, he remains boyishly slim and has a homely-handsome face like Jean-Paul Belmondo. There's an indolent, selfassured air about him that makes it easy to understand why he has attracted so many celebrated beauties.

"Since this month I've been working on 'Pretty Maids All in a Row'" said "The story is located in a high school in sort of a beach town. It could be California, it could be Oregon, It's not a provincial high school, but it's not Hollywood either. It's very American, civilized-average . . . "Usually it doesn't work for a foreign director in Hollywood. It seems that Italian or French directors are not very lucky here. I'm not going to mention any names. One of the things that happens is that they think they know the country but they don't. They think it's a huge zoo and show only the things that surprise them.

Not Typical

"But I'm not a typical French director. I had my first big success here, and I do not have a point to prove by being here. The story happens to be in this country. I hope to bring my style and a flavor of what's happening today to it."

As Vadim talked he tried to keep tab of his children-"I'm baby-sitting today. It's the nurse's day off"-whom he was in the process of shipping off to their respective mothers as the starting date of "Pretty Maids" drew near,

"Nathalie, who is 12, was here till vesterday. She's always lived with memost the time I send her away to Bermuda to her mother (Annette Stroy-

Tomorrow I send Christian to Catherine—he's just seven. Then I send Vanessa to Jane in New York. (Christian and 20-month-old Vanessa resemble their mothers more than they do their father.) I'm scared someday I'll send the wrong child to the wrong mother!" The mention of Miss Fonda seemed a good opening for the question of the status of Vadim's marriage to her.

About Jane

"Jane is really interested 20 hours a day in her politics. It's not any more just the Indians—it's much more than that I don't think it is right for me, a foreigner, to get involved.

"Since four months, she's spending as much time as she could with these things. I don't see her very much. I don't know what will happen. We'll see.

"I'm wise, and I'll survive. There's this old Chinese proverb-how do I say it?about not fighting against the current of the river. Well, I don't fight the current of the river. And if I find a nice beach along the bank of the river I'll

"Time is not your enemy, time must be your friend. Even Jane doesn't know that. Time is an abstraction we have to accept. I don't try to impose on time. It's happened sometimes that I have to do in a few days what's supposed to take months. This is being civilized."

Vadim is always referred to simply as Vadim by his friends-never Roger-not. as Hedda Hopper once suggested, "in the way we honor Garbo by eliminating her given name" but because that is actually his first name.

His true name is Plemiannikov, and his father, who died in the late '30s, was a Russian emigré who became a French diplomat. As a child, Vadim lived in Alexandria and in Turkey and has vivid wartime memories.

Best of all he remembers D-day-but not for the usual reasons. 'I was sleeping in a barn some 40-50 miles from Normandy. With me was a girl a classmate at acting school. About 5 or 6 in the morning I lost my virginity. At just that moment there was a terrific blast, the ceiling started to fall. I wondered, 'What had I done?'"

"We are getting married without any fuss," said the handsome 40-year-old Previn, chief conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra. "No one apart from Mis and myself will know which register office we finally choose for the ceremony.

Previn's divorce from his aecond wife, songwriter Doro-thy Langdon, became final in Los Angeles Wednesday.

Previn is the father of twin boys born last February to 25year-old Mia, ex-wife of Frank Sinatra. Previn and Miss Farrow have a home just outside London.

A son, their second, was born yesterday to Mr. and Mrs. Edson Arantes de Nascimento. The father is better known as Pele, the world's most famous soccer star. Both the child and Mrs. Nascimiento were reported doing well in a Santos, Brazil, hospital.

Filmmaker Otto Preminger's trial on a charge of having desecrated a place of burial by filming a nude scene in a cemetery near Quincy, Massachusetts, has been postponed until he can appear in court. Preminger offered to let the trial start without him, but the judge decided on the delay, without setting a new date. Randolph, Mass, woman filed a complaint against Preminger for having filmed a nude scene with Lizz Minnelli July 31, 1969, for the movie Tell Me That You Love Me, Junie Moon." The woman said her husband had been buried in the cemetery and the scene was a desecration of his grave, * * *

The Sun. day newspaper supplement will report that Kaufman, 62, has been written up by the Wall Street Journal as the No. 1 shoeshine expert in the United States. Square and squatty, Kaufman has run the shoeshine stand at Hopkins Airport. He won't say how much he grosses annually but he has a fashionable appartment in suburban Shaker Heights, part ownership of a restaurant and a fourshop shoe repair business. Shoes for Kaufman's "supershine"cost $5 are sent to him from all over the States. Kaufman admits $5 is a lot for a shoeshine, but he explains that that is actually a loss-leader since it includes all needed repairsnew soles, heels, stitching, etc. Where I really make my money is in rebuilding old shoes and producing custom-made jobs for people with orthopedic problems or way-out tastes." He credit: his success in "rubbing life into leather" to three ingredients: carnauba wax, one of the hardest waxes known (it's made from palm tree leaves; the use of an infrared lamp to generate the hister of an old-fashioned spit shine, and a scuff-resistant spray glaze of a secret formula, "My shines bring cheer to men.
